I think that the time has now come when it must be finally settled whether the Congress is to meet at all, and whether a peaceable solution of this question be possible. confined to Italy. It will be a war, in the first place, of the most sanguinary description, because a war of principle and of passion. It will not be a war between two great nations contending for some definite object, but a war exciting the most violent passions, and once begun in Italy it will extend far beyond the limits of that country. Other passions will be roused, other interests will be touched, other nations will be called to interfere, and the war originating in Italy will certainly at no distant period extend far and wide, wrapping the whole of Europe in one general conflagration. | Hear | It would not be difficult to trace the steps by which such extension will necessarily ensue; but I shall only say that even for England it would be impossible to look with total indifference to any alteration of the occupation of the Adriatic or of its shores. Our interests in the Medicerranean are such as require the most careful vigilance on our part. (Hear, hear.)-It is obvious, moreover, that a little overstepping of the limits of Italy itself would produce a state of things which, under the strongest and highest treaty obligations, would bring the whole of Germany into the field in defence of the Germanic confederation. Modes of Death. A recent Quarterly Review contained the following article, which will be read with interest: "To be shot dead is one of the easiest modes of terminating life; rapid as it is, the body has leisure to feel and reflect. On the first attempt by one of the frantic adherents of Spain to assassinate William, Prince of Orange, who took the lead in the revolt of the Netherlands, the ball passed through the bones in the face, and brought him to the ground. In the instant that preceded stupefaction, he was able to form the notion that the ceiling of the room had fallen and crushed him .-The cannon shot which plunged into the brain of Charles VII. did not prevent him from seizing his sword by the hilt. The idea of an attack and the necessity for de-suppose too tremendous to leave an interval for thought

But it by no means follows that the inflicting of fatal wounds is accompanied by a pang. From what is known of the first effects of gunshot wounds, it is probable the impression is rather stunning than acute. Unless death be immediate the pain is varied as the nature of the injuries, and these are past counting up. But there is nothing singular in the dying sensation though Lord Byron remarked the physiological peculiarity that the expression is invariably that of languor, while in death from a stab the countenance reflects the natural character of gentleness or ferocity, to the last Some of these cases are of interest to show with what slight disturbance life may go on under a mortal wound till it comes to a full stop. A foot soldier at Waterloo, pierced by a musket ball in the hip, begged water of a oldier who chanced to possess a canteen of beer. The wounded man drank, returned his heartiest thanks mentioned that his regiment was nearly exterminated and having proceeded a dozen yards on his way to the rear, fell to the earth, and, with one convulsive movement of the limbs, concluded his career. "His voice,' said the trooper, who himself tells the story, " gave scarcely the slightest sound of weakness.' Captain Basil Hall, who, in his early youth, was present at the battle of Corunna, has singled out, from the conclusion that consigns to oblivion the woes and gallantry of war, another instance, extremely similar which occurred on that occasion. An old officer, who was shot in the head, arrived pale and faint, at the temporary hospital, and begged the surgeon to look at his wound, which was pronounced mortal. Indeed, I feared so," he responded, with impeded ut-terance, "and yet I should wish very much to live a little longer, if it were possible." He laid the sword upon the stone at his side, as gently, says Hall, as if the steel had been turned into glass. and almost immediately sank senseless upon the turf.

Boston Transcript gives the following account of a remarkable ice stratum at Brandon, Vt.: "The latter part of last November, Mr. Andrew the village of Brandon, on a tolerably level plain.
